5G and It's Impacts on Municipalities

On September 26, 2018 the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) approved a new order– the Streamlining Deployment of Next Generation Wireless Infrastructure Declaratory Ruling and Third Report and Order – on 5G wireless network deployment that curtails local authority and preempts local land use regulations.

The FCC Order, among others, limits fees local governments may assess on telecommunications carriers for the placement, construction or co-location of new wireless service facilities. It also creates two new categories of shot clocks for small cell wireless facility review. It limits local governments to 60 days to evaluate applications to attach 5G Small Cells to existing structures and 90 days to review applications for equipment on entirely new structures. The FCC Order could thus prevent local governments from properly examining the impact that construction, modification or installation of broadcasting facilities may have on public health, safety and welfare of the community. What should each municipality do? The session will be focused upon the FCC Order's impact upon municipal land use regulations and how municipalities can better protect their citizens' interests.
