From the Chamber to the Internet: Effects and Considerations for Moving Government Meetings Online

Though it started as an emergency measure to continue to conduct civic business at the start of the COVID-19 pandemic, the trend of moving government meetings online has had lasting effects and shows no signs of going away. IT staff across the country quickly took the chamber online, and what we saw was an increase in civic engagement, greater diversity of meeting participants, and increased efficiency of meetings. This trend has not been without its challenges though, including technology learning curves and higher audio visual costs. What does this mean for public meetings? Join NJ-GMIS to discuss the technical, human and business aspects of the online government meeting trend.
